You are Invited to the Free Talk "Advancing Gender Equity in STEM"

Women's International Study Center (www.wisc-amh.org) with Sandia Labs and the Museum of Nuclear Science and History are presenting a free conversation between two female chemists, both professors at Spelman College in Atlanta.

They have won NIH grants to study strategies to success for women of color in STEM. Strategies include how to navigate an infrastructure with systemic racism and gender inequities. The Fellows are Dr. Leyte Winfield and Dr. Kimberly M. Jackson.

The event will be held Wed, July 27, 2016 at 5:30pm at the Museum of Nuclear Science and History.

The event is free, but registrations are requested and may be made here: <https://app.etapestry.com/onlineforms/WomensInternationalStudyCente/fellows.html>

Sink or Swim? Not Any More! How Universities are Changing Culture

The Chronicle of Higher Education recently highlighted the work of Duke University's School of Medicine in shifting the culture to more support and inclusion with the aim of increasing diversity at the faculty level.

"If the nation's colleges are going to succeed at diversifying the professoriate, work has to be done here, at this crucial point in the pipeline."
